Icenogle commended the Council saying, "Finally, we're beginning to bring some order to the chaos of student organizations." He predicts that CSL will establish "a decent adversary court system," by the end of the semester.

On whether the Regents will choose to review CSL decisions, Ross said they would probably look at anything controversial like coed visitation.

"But the only issue the Regents have spoken on is coed visitation." The Regents haven't closed the door to other coed visitation proposals, Ross indicated.

Communication between the Council and the Regents is through chairman Robinson who informs campus President Joseph Soshnik of CSL action and let's him decide if the Regents should consider the matter.

Prier said the only contact so far has been on the no hours for women action which received a quick okay from the Regents.

"I would be happier if CSL were more free, but we've got a pretty good working relationship with the Regents," Prier concluded.
