

Cipriano also wants to press more

NU to run more next basketball season

The fast break and pressure defense will resume a prominent place in Nebraska's basketball program next season, according to coach Joe Cipriano.

Cip, who lost considerable speed and quickness with three scholastic casualties last season, said Sunday he plans to reincorporate the Cornhusker running game.

"WE HOPE to have more speed," Cipriano said, "so we can break and press more, but to do this, we might have to go to a single post operation."

Nebraska, which finished 7-7 in the Big Eight Conference and 16-9 overall, frequently employed the single post in its last five games as 6-7 Leroy Chalk and 6-10 Chuck Jura divided playing time.

"I think the most disappointing part of our season was the first two games in the conference," Cip offered, referring to a narrow road loss to Iowa State and the Huskers' only home court setback to Big 8 champion Kansas State.

"After losing those two games," Cipriano analyzed, "we had our backs to the wall the rest of the season."

Losing Jim Brooks, Cliff Moller and Marvin Stewart midway through the season then forced Cipriano to change both his offensive and defensive strategy.

Stewart, who finished with a 14.3 average, is expected to play next season, however, and with the return of Jura, Al Nissen, Chalk and Mike Petersen should give Nebraska a championship-caliber unit.

"WE'LL HAVE a good nucleus," Cipriano noted, "but if a few of our players do not work on their weaknesses this summer, we're going to have problems."

Petersen, who was impressive near the end of the season, gained valuable maturity as a sophomore forward, according to Cip. "If he continues to work like he has," Cip said, "he has a good future."

Cipriano expects freshmen Tony Riehl and Tom Gregory to perhaps play important roles in their first varsity seasons. "We need a forward," Cip said, "and Riehl is a definite consideration."
