Stohs doubtful for CU

Nebraska's top hitter and starting pitcher may miss this weekend's three-game home baseball stand against Colorado.

Grand Island native Gene Stohs, who is an outfield starter when not pitching, has been declared "doubtful" by Husker coach Tony Sharpe because of arm and leg ailments.

Stohs

Stohs, who has a .350 batting average, ranks ninth in Big Eight Conference statistics. The Huskers' .236 team batting mark is the worst in the league.

BUT NU, with the best fielding team in the conference and effective pitching, will try to improve from its fourth-place tie and 4-4 league mark against the Buffs, who stand 3-7.

Sharpe plans to start sophomores Glenn Gilmore and Paul Marek on the mound for Friday's doubleheader, which starts at 1:30 p.m. at the NU diamond north of Memorial Stadium.

If Stohs is unable to throw Saturday, freshman Bob Munson will get the pitching call with reliever Bruce Cramer (3-0) ready for relief duty, Sharpe said.

NU gets rare track treat

Track fans will have their only opportunity to watch the Nebraska team compete outdoors when the Huskers tangle with Colorado Saturday at 12:30 p.m. at Memorial Stadium.

Nebraska easily defeated Colorado in the indoor season, 78½-43½, but Nebraska coach Frank Sevigne expects a tougher test Saturday.

"COLORADO LOOKS tough on paper," Sevigne said, "and we will be weaker than usual."

The Huskers' weakness this week results from slight injuries to standouts Don Quarrie and Garth Case. With the Big Eight conference meet in two weeks, both will not be competing Saturday as a precautionary measure.

Because of the injuries John Mottley is being shifted from the 440 to the sprints to run with Horace Levy, and freshman Tim Lebsack will compete in the 440 with Leighton Priestley and Bob Pierce.

The top events Saturday should be the high hurdles with Randy Butts and Gary Gressett facing conference leader Marcus Walker, the three-mile with Greg Carlberg and Mel Campbell tangling with the Buffs' Rick Trujillo, and the broad jump with Colorado's T.J. facing Nebraska's Hopeton Gordon and Eric Heeter.

Carlberg and Campbell will both be running in the mile and the three-mile.

SEVIGNE SAID the mile relay should also be close. Nebraska posted the best time ever in the conference (3:08) last weekend at the Drake Relays, but the Huskers will be without Case Saturday.

Colorado is one of the few teams in the country with two 16-foot pole vaulters. Mike Wedman is the conference leader at 16-6 and Dave Bussabarger is tied for second at 16-0.

Saturday's meet is only the second meet scheduled on the Nebraska track in two years, but Sevigne said the track is in its best condition in four or five years. "If it doesn't rain there won't be any problems," he said.

THE HUSKERS will close their dual season May 9 at Missouri. The conference meet is scheduled May 15-16 at Lawrence, Kan.

Bucks draft Scantz

Either the Milwaukee Bucks or the New York Nets may be the pro basketball future for Tom Scantlebury.

The Bucks drafted Scantz in its supplementary phase late last week, the Nebraska guard related Thursday. The Nets had contacted him after his appearance in the Aloha cage Classic a month ago, he added.

"I plan to try out for both teams in late June," Scantz said. "I haven't signed a contract because I want to see which team will work to my advantage."

"I think I can make both teams," Scantz explained, "but obviously I have to prove myself. Then, I want to see which team offers the best financial deal."

Scantlebury said he will participate in the full one-week Nets' rookie camp, but since the two camps' dates overlap, he will work only three days with the Bucks.

"But I plan to work out the first of June in a basketball school at Milwaukee," Scantz said.

The fourth highest scorer in Nebraska basketball history, Scantlebury was the leading scorer for the Midwest team in the Aloha Classic.
