Varner looks at Nebraska

The 1969 legislature appropriated $6½ million for the library but it's been hung up in the courts since last fall on a technicality.

Commenting on student power, Varner said he knows there is some concern on the part of students about the way power at the University is distributed. But he says that problem is up to faculty and students to wrestle with.

"It's not wise for students to be policy makers, but it is wise for them to be policy participants," said Varner who described student input at the decision making level as "invaluable."

He said he is impressed with the student attitude at Nebraska — it's "responsible and serious." Varner said he is also pleased with the administration's readiness to listen to students.

In his first 95 days in office Varner said he has tried to get acquainted with the state. The University and the people of the state have a warm relationship, he said, although voters may quarrel with the University over specific issues.

A second impression the chancellor has gleaned from Nebraskans is that they are concerned over the brain drain of educated young people from the state. This has created a population sag between the age groups of 25 and 40, he said, which hurts the economy because most of the population is either young or old, two groups that require many public services.

The University can help combat this problem by emphasizing science, technology and engineering and helping attract more businesses and investors to Nebraska to open up employment opportunities, Varner said.

Nebraska has some things going for it that makes the state attractive to industry, Varner said. Nebraska's geographical location, the fact that it's not over populated or over polluted and the quality of its people are assets, he explained.

If Omaha and Lincoln can get together, he said enormous opportunities will be available. The merger with UNO is a good beginning step, he said, Bob Pfeiffer, ASUN first vice president, urged all students with "an interest in student government" to sign up for interviews outside the ASUN Office, Room 335 Student Union, immediately.

Appointments for members and chairmen of 16 committees will be made this spring. Other appointments will be made next fall.

The appointments made this spring will allow students to do research and ground work during the summer to make committees more effective next year, said Mark Theisen, ASUN second vice president.

Pfeiffer added, "The committees are probably the most important part of ASUN. That's where the first work gets done. Then the idea is taken to the Senate."

Appointments for the Publications Board must be made by May 7, Theisen said. This board chooses the Daily Nebraskan and Cornhusker staffs and prescribes the rules governing them.

Four seniors, two juniors and one law student must be appointed to Student Tribunal by May 10, Theisen explained that this court judges matters of student discipline referred to it by the Office of Student Affairs.

Two students will also be appointed to the Teaching Council. These students will serve with seven faculty members to promote innovation and experimentation at all levels of teaching.

A chairman and approximately 10 members will be appointed to seven ASUN committees this spring:

—The Services Committee will work to establish ASUN student rooms such as a day care center and a book store.

—The Legislative Liaison Committee will promote student interests by lobbying in the Nebraska Legislature. This group also has an outstate Speakers Bureau.

—The ASUN Education Committee promotes educational reform through Advisory Boards, the Teaching Council and the Faculty Senate Committees.
