Sculpture garden, exhibit, take shape

Amid masses of twisted metal and plastic valued between $3,500 and $60,000 each the Sheldon Sculpture Garden was dedicated Friday.

The ceremony was highlighted by the opening of a two-month American sculpture exhibit which includes 172 pieces, shown both in the garden and in the gallery.

According to Jon Nelson, Assistant Director of Sheldon Memorial Art Gallery, the public sculpture garden is one of only four in the United States. Others are located at the Museum of Modern Art in New York City, the Los Angeles County Museum and UCLA.

One of the features of the garden is a sunken court immediately adjacent to the gallery. Opening on this court is a series of terraces just west of the gallery that will be used as display platforms.

The garden ties the fine arts departments of the University together, linking the art department, School of Architecture, Westbrook Music Building, Kimball Recital Hall and the University Theatre.

The current sculptures will be shown for two months, although the show has taken more than a year to organize. The exhibit will close Nov. 11.

Six of the pieces belong to the University while the rest are on loan from private individuals. Despite their value, Nelson said there has been no vandalism and he sees no problems in the future.

When the exhibit ends the sculptures will be returned to their owners with new pieces added to the garden periodically. This spring the area will serve as a showcase for student exhibits.

Free University needs leaders

Nebraska Free University needs course leaders and suggestions for courses, according to Free University Committee chairman Steve Fowler.

He added that the committee is also taking applications for new members. Ideas and applications should be submitted to the committee through the ASUN office, third floor, Nebraska Union by Sept. 23.

Fowler said Free University registration will be conducted in the Union Sept. 30, Oct. 1 and 2. Classes are scheduled to begin the week of Oct. 5.

Guess who's coming to Manhattan, Kan.

Manhattan, Kan. — President Richard M. Nixon is scheduled to make one of his rare appearances on a college campus here Wednesday with a speech at Kansas State University's Ahearn Fieldhouse.

A demonstration has been planned for the two-hour visit. The President will be protected by hundreds of police officers and secret service men.

Watch for the Thursday edition of the Daily Nebraskan, which will feature on-the-spot reports and pictures.

Alpha Lambda sponsors tea

Alpha Lambda Delta, academic honorary society for freshmen women at the University, will sponsor the "Regents Tea" at the Nebraska Union Thursday, Sept. 24 from 4 to 5:30 p.m.

Society member Diane Harris said all members are invited to attend, as well as all freshman women Regent Scholarship winners.
