changed much, he said.

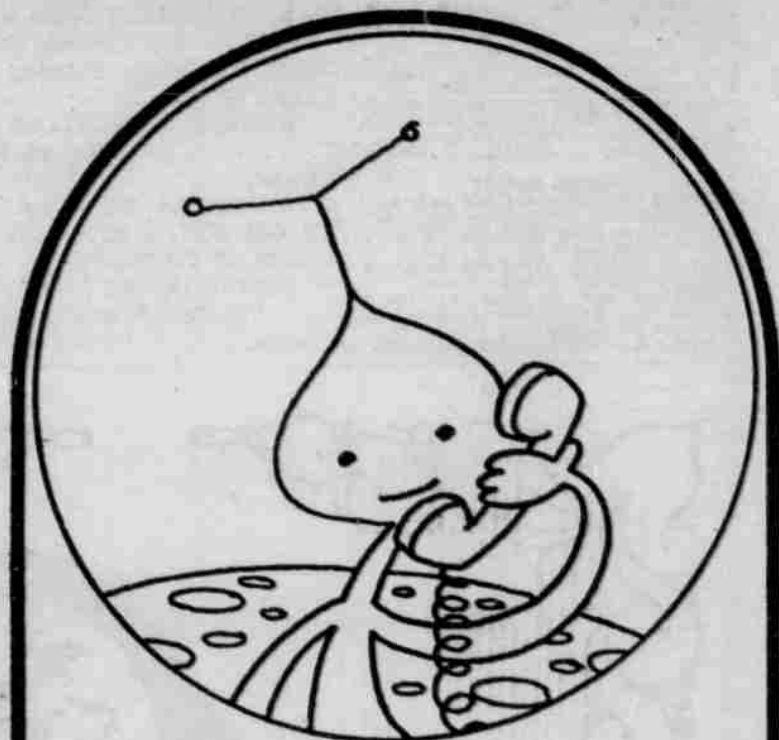

Rozman, who earned a Ph.D. from Florida in 1968, said he did nothing illegal — his actions were just and well within the framework of freedom of expression.

He termed the ROTC Building negotiations with the administration "respectful," even though he did differ strongly with the opinions of Dean of Faculties C. Peter Magrath and President Joseph Soshnik.

An NU teacher since 1967, he said he wanted the administrators to come out with a statement in the name of the University deploring the American invasion of Cambodia. They staunchly refused.

"I think I have a right to disagree," he said.
