New University is alive

He added that any hope for a New University lies in the students. "If the students wait on the faculty there will be no dramatic change on this campus."

However, it appears as if the administration is also interested in a New University of Nebraska. The Board of Regents recently approved a bold $199.6 million University budget for the 1971-73 biennium that is designed to help build Nebraska, reverse the out-migration of Nebraska youth, and make NU the finest university in the area.

Included in the budget is $2.29 million to establish four new inter-campus programs designed to make important contributions to the well-being of the state.

The funds are sought for a water resources program, environmental studies, a program designed to make the cultural resources of the University available to every Nebraskan and a program designed to improve the attractiveness of Nebraska for business and industrial development.
