

Lincoln Indian community is aided by Indian Center

The Lincoln Indian Center hasn't had much money, publicity or time to operate, but it still does a lot for Lincoln's Indian community.

The Indian Center was conceived and is operated by Lincoln's Indian citizens. Begun largely as a social center, it has evolved into a community meeting place providing varied services for its people.

The Center's staff secretary, Barbara Schneider, described some of the projects that have been initiated. About eight individuals are currently getting aid from a program for alcoholics. The Center works in conjunction with the local chapter of Alcoholics Anonymous to provide help for individuals with drinking problems.

There is also a women's league, sewing group, arts and crafts program for the children and an adult education program that provides refresher courses in basic subjects like math and English.

Center personnel also organize grade school children to be tutored by University students. They work through the Tri-University Program to set up the tutoring.

The Center has 71 paid members. According to Schneider the members must solicit funds from the Lincoln community. Most members are poor people and, although the Federal Office of Economic Opportunity provides funds to hire staff, there is no money for programs.

The Center's Executive Board is trying to interest all of Lincoln's Indian citizens in the Center's programs. Matthew Sheridan, an Omaha Indian and the Center's Community Organizer, said the program was "starting to have some success." He added, "It has taken a few months to get people to accept them, but they are starting to see the benefit of the programs."

Sheridan, who has been working with a similar program in Macy, intends to go into Indian Community work after he receives his sociology degree. He said it had always been "my intention to work with my people."

He believes the Center should not only bring the Indian community together but also "develop programs that will help in the everyday life of Indians in Lincoln."

NU-CU tickets on lottery

Student tickets for the Nebraska-Colorado football game (Oct. 31 in Boulder) have been placed on lottery.

According to Nebraska ticket manager Jim Pittinger, over 3,000 requests were made by NU students for the 2,300 tickets available. The lottery was held at the Coliseum Thursday afternoon and students will be able to pick-up tickets if their name was drawn or their checks at 9 a.m. Monday in the Coliseum.

World in Revolution

The 1971 World in Revolution Conference will deal with the impact of technology on the individual and the society.

Speakers have not yet been picked, according to Bob Penn, conference coordinator. However, an open meeting to discuss possible speakers for the spring conference will be Oct. 15 at 7 p.m. in the Nebraska Union.

Penn said the conference will have five to seven speakers and will probably receive $4,500 from the Union Program Council and $1,500 from ASUN. He also noted that the Faculty Senate Convocation Committee might also financially support the Conference.

The format of the conference will be altered this year to include more informal discussions. Art exhibits, movies and possibly plays will also be included in the conference, according to Penn.

"The speakers participating will determine to a large degree the definite topics" remarked Penn, "but we hope to include cybernetics and communication, the mass media and the arts, as well as other possible areas."
