

Huskers survive Halloween scare

by JIM JOHNSTON

Big Red athletic machines have been suffering unexpected lumps this year.

The Cincinnati Reds' baseball machine was quickly humbled by Baltimore in the World Series. And it hasn't exactly been a Super Bowl year for Kansas City's "Big Red" Chiefs.

But the Big Red from Nebraska has avoided the jinx, despite a Halloween scare from the Colorado Buffaloes Saturday.

Nebraska opened the scoring quickly, building a 12-0 lead on two touchdown strikes from quarterback Van Brownson to Guy Ingles. It appeared that Husker coach Bob Devaney would receive an easy treat — his 75th win at Nebraska and 110th of his coaching career.

Devaney received his treat with a 29-13 win, but not before the Buffaloes provided a scare with their bag of tricks.

The Buffaloes shifted into a double wing offense and a five-man defensive line.

"I think we were too satisfied after scoring two easy touchdowns," explained Brownson. "When you score that quick, you just think you can score anytime you want."

But the Huskers offense found trouble from then on and Colorado's double wing and triple option started to click. The Buffaloes ran from that formation with authority rolling up 297 yards rushing.

"Colorado surprised us by the new formation when they shifted into a double wing," offered Devaney. "We hadn't seen it before and they executed it very well. They had good downfield blocking."

Late in the second quarter, Colorado halfback Jon Keyworth ran four straight plays for gains of five, seven, nine and 15 yards. That advanced the ball from the Colorado seven to the 43-yard line.

Then swift Cliff Branch raced 33 yards to the Nebraska 24 on the next play. Jon Tarver's 14-yard run up the middle setup the first Colorado score.

Branch punched it over from the seven and Dave Haney added the extra points. Nebraska's lead was quickly cut to 12-7.

The Buffs had marched 93 yards in only eight plays. And they were well on their way toward another first-half touchdown before time ran out.

"Their pitchout hurt us more than I thought it would," said Devaney. "We just weren't able to contain that play except for a couple of times in the second half."

The Huskers did stop the play a few times in the second half. But the majority of the half provided the same story as the first — Colorado's ability to move the ball on the ground and Nebraska's inability to do so.

"We wanted to establish our running game and make Colorado respect it," explained Brownson. "But we just couldn't get our running game going. I don't think we were blocking as well today as we have been."

So Brownson went back to an air attack. But it wasn't a deep passing game like it had been in the first quarter. "We started going more to our delay patterns and short outs," explained Husker splitend Guy Ingles. "They started playing us deeper to avoid the long bomb."

The Huskers' short-pass attack moved the ball to the Colorado 29 where Paul Rogers booted a 46-yard field goal. That gave the Huskers a more enjoyable 15-7 lead.

That was Rogers most important field goal of the season.

It forced Colorado to go for a two-point conversion after the Buffs' Jim Bratten scored with 11:22 remaining.

The two-point conversion would have tied the game, but Nebraska's Larry Jacobson and Joe Blahak tripped Branch on the one-foot line to kill hopes of a CU tie.

Then came the play that put the Buffs on their back. Jeff Kinney took the kickoff and returned it to the Colorado 21. Brownson plunged over from the one a few plays later and Nebraska had a 22-13 lead.

"I had some thoughts of going all the way," said Kinney of his kickoff return. "But it didn't come true. It didn't matter because we scored. That's all that counts."

And the Huskers scored again on a seven-yard run by Kinney with 5:34 remaining to leave Boulder with a 29-13 victory.

High court may tangle with the draft

Washington (CPS) — For the second year in a row, the Supreme Court can be expected to be the major source of reforms in the draft.

Last term (Oct., 1969 — July, 1970) the court ruled on several cases that the Selective Service System was overstepping its legal authority in its day-to-day functions.

The Court found that Selective Service Regulations, which are written and put into force by proclamation of the President, gave many powers to the System which were not provided for in the law as passed by Congress.

Under the leadership of Chief Justice Warren Burger — but usually over his strong objections — the Court found a number of regulations in conflict with the intent of actual working of Congressional action.

This year the Court is being asked to focus on two draft issues: the right of registrants to be represented by a lawyer during dealings with their draft boards and the right of selective conscientious objection to a particular war.

In Weller v. United States the Court is being asked to overturn the ruling of a North Carolina district judge which dismissed an indictment against Weller for failure to report for induction. The Judge ruled in favor of Weller on the grounds that he was denied his constitutional rights when his lawyer was not allowed at his local board hearing for conscientious objector status.

The system has traditionally held, both in regulations and less formal documents, that the meeting between the local board and the individual registrant is not a formal, legal confrontation, and therefore specifically excludes legal counsel from participation in such meetings.

The judge agreed with Weller's contention that the personal appearance before the local board is far more serious in terms of its potential effect on a registrant's life and liberty than many other forms of administrative hearings where counsel has been regarded as a right, such as security clearance hearings.

"Certainly, failing to establish a conscientious objector claim is as serious as the impact of loss of access to classified information," he said.

In the other major case, Guy Porter Gillette is appealing his conviction for failing to submit to induction on the grounds that his religious training and belief is unconstitutionally discriminated against by the requirement in the draft law that conscientious objectors be opposed to all wars, not just the specific wars in which they might expect to fight.

This "selective objection" is the crux of a major dispute over the whole conscientious objector status. On one hand, some churches hold as a doctrine of faith that their members must decide for themselves whether a specific war is in conflict with their beliefs or not.

These faiths hold that there are situations in which war is a justifiable means of resolving conflict. The individual is responsible to determine for himself and act in accordance with his determination as to the morality of a particular conflict.

The draft law specifically excludes from exemption those adherents to the "just war" doctrine and has traditionally required opposition to all wars as a primary precondition for CO status. Presently, selective Service officials oppose extension of this exemption to selective objectors because of difficulty in determining their "sincerity".

Officials feel that many opponents of the war in Vietnam might take advantage of this difficulty in sorting the "sincere" from the "insincere" as a springboard to escape service without meeting the system's rigorous requirements which are now applied to applicants for the exemption.

distinction between sexes in their application."

The College Life Committee, an influential faculty-administration-student group, at Wesleyan approved a similar resolution last week.

Nevertheless Munson, Rozman and Ishikawa are unsure what the Student Court, composed of one woman and six men, will decide. Ishikawa could receive a warning on her permanent record.

Technically the Court does not have the power to change rules. But by declaring the cute, black-haired coed innocent the Court could cause a genuine stir on the Wesleyan campus.
