

Coed flag-football is victim of weather

The intramural department's coed flag-football program has ended for this year.

That was the announcement made Monday by coed-football supervisors Nancy Semler and Annette Wiechert. According to Semler, bad weather was the key factor which lead to the decision to end coed flag-football for the year.

The coed program lasted for about three weeks with games being played Wednesday and Sunday afternoons.

"The students had a lot of fun playing on the Astro-Turf in the stadium," said Semler. "It was like turning cows loose in an open pasture."

Despite the short life of the coed football program, both supervisors agreed the program was a success. "The guys really enjoyed the football games," Wiechert said. "And the girls really got excited over the games too."

Now that the program is over, Semler and Wiechert will be working in other areas in the intramural and recreation department. Semler, a junior majoring in food nutrition, will be helping with the volleyball program. Wiechert, a senior majoring in physical education, will also be working with the volleyball program.

Up the middle . . . Colorado's Ward Walsh (41) runs for three tough yards against the Huskers before being hauled down by Jim Anderson (18) and Ed Periard (56). Nebraska's defensive end John Hyland (57) provides help from the rear.

Intramural playoffs to begin this week

The intramural flag-football playoffs begin this week with 40 teams competing for the crown.

The playoffs consist of the top two teams from the 20 leagues involved in the flag football program. There were a total of 115 teams participating in the program with the top 40 teams surviving for the single elimination playoffs.

Delta Tau Delta fraternity, last year's all-University champion, and the Lifers, the independent champion last year, are also in this year's playoffs.

If the weather is good, the playoffs should be completed in two weeks with the all-University champion being crowned on the final day.

The games are scheduled for the intramural fields at 19th & Vine streets and 17th and Vine streets all of this week and next week.
