

Finalists vie for Queen title

Finalists for the title of 1970 Homecoming Queen have been announced by Tassels and Corn Cobs.

The 10 contenders for the crown to be awarded Friday evening are: Jane Andrews, Rita Becker, Linda June Brown, Barbara Callahan, Annette Hudson, Martha Lynne Liggett, Dru Mort, Janet Smayda, Barbara Ann White, and Pam Whitted.

Voting for Homecoming Queen will be Wednesday. It will be by college between 10 a.m. and 6 p.m.

Students in the College of Agriculture and Home

Economics will vote at the East Union, Arts and Sciences students will vote at the Nebraska Union, Engineering and Architecture students at Ferguson Hall, and Teachers college students at the Teachers College building.

Graduate and Professional students and College of Business Administration students will vote at Love Library. After 6 p.m. all students may vote at the Union. The polls close at 8 p.m.

The queen will be announced at intermission of the Homecoming Dance Friday night in the Union. Music will be provided by The Shadows of Knight.

Other homecoming activities this week include a free folk concert featuring the Sand County musical group from Kansas City in the Crib at 8 p.m. Wednesday and a pep rally at the Union at 6 p.m. Friday.

Saturday's homecoming activities consist of the dedication of the Lynn Broyhill Memorial fountain at 11 a.m., a luncheon honoring former Chancellor Clifford Hardin at 11:30 a.m. in the Union, and the Nebraska-Kansas State football game at 1:30 p.m.

University sets PACE

made a commitment. Last summer about $26,000 was given voluntarily from their salaries. Paul Olson, an English professor, had two reasons for helping to raise the money.

First, the Faculty Senate passed a resolution calling for the fund drive and he thought it should be carried out. The second, and most important reason was that Olson, who is chairman of the Human Rights Committee, has strong feeling about the university's commitment to poor students.

In projects like Tri-University he has worked with many low-income people. "I know how badly the institution is serving these groups," Olson said that helping these individuals should be done simply as a matter of "justice" since our society has not provided many of them equal opportunities.

In Olson's view, the solution of social problems is something that students and faculty should cooperate in achieving. In a very "establishment sort of thing" like PACE, he emphasized, every student and faculty member should be able to work together.

Dean for Student Affairs Russ Brown agreed. He noted that low income students find money a "constant source of worry." Any emergency, he said, no matter how small, may cause a severe hardship even if it only requires a few dollars.

Brown has found that even when a poor student can make the minimum necessary to cover his expenses he may still be slighted in education. He has discovered that heavy job demands, especially on freshmen, take time that should be used for improvement of study skills.

Outside work also takes the student out of extra-curricular activities which Brown believes are a "vital part of a college education."

He claimed the state has not provided any sizable increases in aid recently, particularly in relation to the increasing demand.

"It's hard to know what is the long range answer," Brown said, but he added that PACE would provide a base for additional commitments to poor students.

'MSs.' published by NFU Underground Magazine

The first accomplishment of the Free University course, Underground Magazine, will be realized Tuesday when Volume 1 of "MSs." is published.

The coordinator of the course, Tom Hafemeister, said the magazine has materialized through the efforts of the members of the course, with the assistance of the English department mimeograph and ASUN supplied paper and stencils.

Hafemeister said the group meets in the basement of Dirt Cheap, "making it a truly underground magazine."

The 25 cent, 30-page magazine consists of poetry, fiction, and non-fiction works. Five poems in the magazine are by sixth and seventh graders.

"MSs." will be available beginning Tuesday in Dirt

Cheap, etc., in the Union and on Campus from course members. Proceeds from the sales will go to the production of the next magazine.

Hafemeister also said that the group is interested in submissions from anyone on just about anything, with length as no real restriction, within reason. The submissions should be sent to Rod McCullough, 946 "D" Street.

The next issue of "MSs." is planned for Christmas time.

Geography majors to meet

A meeting for all geography majors will be in 228 Burnett Hall, Wednesday, from 3-4 p.m. The group will elect a departmental representative and will consider student goals.
