

Liberal abortion laws

legislation did not immediately solve discrimination problems.

Laws regarding medical treatment of minors in respect to contraceptives, abortion and pregnancy need to be changed also, according to Pilpel. Many states have already removed requirements that minors can only be treated after parental consent. Nebraska has not, but the speaker predicted that it "will probably have to."

She also argued that physicians in student health centers should not have to provide birth control devices or information if they are against doing so. They should, however, be required to refer students to a doctor who is willing to assist them.

In Pilpel's opinion, many of the problems occurring around the abortion and birth control issue result from doctor's fears of legal responsibility. Many of these doubts are a product of inadequate training provided by medical schools on medical law.

She said medical students should get their instruction in medical law from lawyers instead of doctors. In most cases, she pointed out, the doctor is not responsible as long as he isn't negligent, doesn't break the law and has his patient's consent.

An example she provided was that of a woman who gets sterilized against her husband's wishes. Although the husband might sue his wife for divorce, attorney Pilpel noted, he couldn't hold the doctor responsible as long as the woman had agreed to the operation.

In addition to her position as a lawyer, Pilpel has authored several books and articles and served as an editor. She also writes a monthly column and holds chairmanship positions in the American Civil Liberties Union and the American Bar Association.

She is on the Board of Directors and is a counselor to the Planned Parenthood-World Population Group and counsel to the Sex Information and Education Council of the United States (SIECUS).

In addition, she has served on women's rights committees for Presidents Kennedy and Johnson.

Angela Davis chosen honorary homecoming queen in California

SACRAMENTO (CPS) — Angela Davis, recently indicted in San Rafael, Calif. on charges of murder, kidnaping and conspiracy, has been chosen honorary homecoming queen at Sacramento City College, also in California.

Students on the executive council here voted 12-3 to bestow this honor on the black militant who is still fighting extradition from New York to California.

A conventional homecoming queen will also be chosen, at which time students will be polled about the selection of the honorary queen. The proposal to elect Davis queen was presented by the College's Black Student Union.

Said one of the dissenting voters, Paige Miller, "I feel that homecomings are more or less dying out in this nation, and things like this are helping to kill them."

Counselors move to Seaton Hall

The University Counseling Service moved to Seaton Hall from the Administration building last week because "we were sitting on top of each other," according to Vernon Williams, assistant director.

The service, which hopes "to improve the personal side of the student's experience," occupies the third floor of Seaton, he said. The building is located at the north end of the Selleck Quadrangle.

Vocational, educational and personal counseling is provided by the seven full-time and four part-time counselors, the director said.

Off-duty hours now find the staff painting the rooms in preparation for their open house, tentatively set for the beginning of next semester, Williams added.
