

Regents list priorities

An addition for the Love Memorial Library and land acquisition for parking at the University of Nebraska at Omaha were given top priority in a revised list of capital construction appropriation requests announced by the Board of Regents Friday.

The new request does not ask for more than the University originally expected, but is more than $9 million over the initial request.

The extra $9 million represents the amount necessary to finance projects which were deleted from last biennium's budget by the state supreme court. These included the library appropriation.

The Regents had been hoping that the legislature would appropriate funds for the invalidated projects without request, but Chancellor D. B. Varner said the State Budget Office had not accepted that plan.

Varner reported that the University had been asked to revise the construction request and present all the items in one request.

The first priority drew a request of over $6 million. Second on the list, drawing over $2,300,000 was land acquisition at Lincoln and the Medical Center in Omaha.

The third priority went to a classroom building at UNO. Fourth was a life sciences building in Lincoln and fifth went to a School of Nursing Building at the Medical Center in Omaha.

A Lincoln Home Economics Building was tenth of the 13 requests. Funds for this building were also invalidated by the court.

The Regents chose to wait before naming architects for the primary planning of the home economics building and a new field house and athletic facility for the Lincoln campus.

Though the athletic facility is not on the list of priorities for the coming biennium some legislators have indicated that it is high on their lists of priorities.

Meeting to discuss junior college grads

Every year an increasing number of junior college graduates are enrolling at the University.

A conference is planned Dec. 3 between representatives from the seven Nebraska junior colleges and the University to discover better ways to serve junior college transfer students.

"We hope that we can help the junior colleges learn more about the University," said John Aronson, Director of University Admissions. "But we also hope to learn ways from the junior colleges in which we can make life better for transfer students."

The conference between the Junior Colleges and the University is the first one of its kind.

Four hundred students at the University have come from junior colleges. "The number is not very large compared to the whole student body, but we are just receiving the growth in junior college enrollment. In two years, that number will be considerably larger," Aronson said.

For a number of years many of the Nebraska junior colleges lagged behind the rest of the nation, he continued. They were supported only by their local communities until 1968 when the Legislature established state support of junior colleges.

"Many students find the environment of a junior college better suited to their needs than the first two years at the University," Aronson said. "The conference will enable us to understand the background of junior college transfer students."

"Maybe we are overestimating the student, which is just as bad as underestimating him. However, we are getting good results from the junior college graduates."

A coffee hour, at 2:30 p.m. in the Union Centennial Room is open to the former junior college students at the University. There will be a discussion between the University and junior college representatives and the junior college transfers.

The colleges planning to attend are McCook, Fairbury, North Platte, York, Nebraska Western at Scottsbluff, Platte at Columbus and Nebraska Northeastern at Norfolk.

Law library falls short of accreditation standards

"Although the chances of losing our accreditation are small," says the assistant dean of the Law College, "our law library doesn't meet the standards set by the Association of American Law Schools."

Accreditation standards require each law library to provide seating for at least 65 per cent of the student body at one time, Donald L. Shaneyfelt explained.

plained, and next year the library will be 100 seats short of meeting this requirement.

"There's no way the present library can be expanded without a new building," he said.

Appropriations for a new building are slated for the 1973-75 biennium, and if the money is received, actual construction will probably take another two, Shaneyfelt said.

East Campus is the proposed site for the future Law College, said the dean, observing that the present problem of noise from interstate traffic would be removed.

In addition to the overcrowded library, limited classroom space makes a new building necessary, Shaneyfelt said. There's space for only three classrooms in the 58-year-old building.

Besides library requirements, accreditation by the Association depends on the student-faculty ratio, the number of faculty, entrance requirements and the curriculum. Shaneyfelt said.
