A coffee hour at 2:30 p.m. Thursday in the Union Centennial Room will be open to Nebraska junior college transfers who are now attending the University.

The coffee hour is part of a conference, between representatives from the seven Nebraska junior colleges and the University, to discover better ways to serve junior college transfer students.

Free speech moves

prisoners of war returned is to end the war.

As part of an effort to reincarnate the peace movement in Nebraska the Free Speech Movement has established a permanent "peace committee." Members say the purpose is to promote a "peace consciousness and to remind people that the war they opposed last year is still going on."

The committee plans a program featuring speakers, films and music in January. If the money can be raised they may put out a calendar showing important dates in the peace movement and pictures of war victims.

The Movement has started a "people's library" and is working on a project to provide cheap food. Called the "Food Conspiracy," its organizers plan to purchase food in bulk quantities for resale to Lincolmites at below retail prices.

Barret also noted that even though some Free Speech members have written for the Informer it is not an organ of the group. The Informer is a weekly news and information sheet.

Barret is unconcerned with the size of membership in the Free Speech Movement. In his opinion Nebraskans aren't interested in "large political-type" groups.

He said the Movement was more interested in people who "will work to do something because what is important is getting something done."
