Book exchange 'overly successful'

Not only is the ASUN book exchange a success, but "we're doing too well," according to Roy Baldwin, ASUN senator in charge of the project.

"We wanted to keep it small, and we were completely overwhelmed," he said, referring to the 45-minute waiting line in the exchange Monday afternoon.

The book exchange, sponsored by the ASUN Economic Development Committee, is an experiment to determine reaction to a student-owned store, Baldwin

ASUN expects no profit from the exchange, Baldwin said, although a ten-cent handling fee is added to the price of each book to pay the salaries of exchange personnel. So far, 2,000 books have been handled.

Two ASUN senators and several members of the Residence Halls Association run the exchange located in the Union conference rooms, he said.

A book exchange in Burr Hall on East Campus hasn't been as successful as the city campus exchange, Baldwin said. A staff member at the Burr exchange, Bern Nelson, estimated the number of books to be about 150.

Circle K, a student community service organization, operates the exchange in cooperation with ASUN. "Our goal is to continue the exchange next semester," said Nelson.

The city campus exchange will be continued, although whether they will open for the summer sessions or just in the fall hasn't been decided, Baldwin said.

The continued success of the project depends on student participation, said Liggett. "The attitude of many students is that it won't work, so they don't bother to participate," she added.

The Union book store has been very helpful, said Baldwin, by supplying the exchange with price lists of books to be used next semester. "We take problem cases away from them" he said, because they don't have to listen to as many arguments over prices.

Severl efforts in the past to organize student-owned bookstores have been successful until the person in charge graduated or students lost interest, he added.

One problem with the present exchange is finding a way to give cash remittances to students if their books are sold, Baldwin said.

Students have to pick up a check for the money from the student activities office in the Union, starting Feb. 11, he said. There's no need for the exchange to stay open after Friday, Baldwin said. Books are still being accepted at the exchange, although they probably won't be sold at this late date, he added.
