make a decision. He said he expects a final decision by Friday.

Parties may be represented by counsel. Those who are not students will not be required to go before the Tribunal, Gierhan said. But, he added that they may want to appear because they may want to become students again in the future.

He said there was a possibility the University will place a hold on the non-student's registration if they should try to register again. "We have to look at all the legal implications," Gierhan added.

Concerning the students who were placed on probation, Gierhan said they would probably appear before the Tribunal "at some future date." As of yet the time is not determined.

The Tribunal will recommend whether they should be taken off probation status or if sanctions should be applied, he said.

In addition to the list in Wednesday's Daily Nebraskan Carl Joseph Circo, an Arts and Sciences student, is on probation. He was placed on probation in Love Library after its closing time Wednesday night.

Gary Schleiger, a Teacher's College student, was put on probation twice, once when he refused to leave the chancellor's office and again Wednesday evening when he briefly refused to leave the Administration Building at its closing time.

Gierhan said Schleiger's case is more serious than the others.
