

Indian Week has speaker, pow wow

The first Indian Culture Week at the University will begin at 10:30 a.m. Monday when Lee Brightman, director of the Native American Studies Program at the University of California at Berkeley, speaks in the Nebraska Union.

Brightman, also president of the United Native Americans, heads a list of 11 Indian speakers who will visit the University throughout the week. A pow-wow featuring Indian dancing and food will cap off the week on Friday night, and Saturday and Sunday afternoons.

Alice Neundorf, Indian counselor in the Office of Student Affairs and spokeswoman for NU's new Indian liberation movement, said she has invited Indian student organizations, Indian centers, and tribal councils from Nebraska and five neighboring states to participate in the pow-wow.

Neundorf, the only Indian ever to get a degree from the University of Nebraska, said sororities and fraternities on the campus have agreed to house the guests.

"This is going to be a new experience for the students and faculty here," she said. "Most universities in this part of the country have annual Indian Culture Weeks, but this is our first."

The primary purpose of the week will be to get some "cross-cultural communication" going between the Indians and the University community. Each visiting speaker will be available for rap sessions after their speech.

Bill Arfmann, outgoing chairman of ASUN's Human Rights Committee, which is co-sponsoring the culture week along with the new Indian liberation movement, said "it is incredible that in all the University's history there has been only one native American graduate. We hope this week will increase awareness in the University community of this institution's inadequacy regarding these people."

Monday afternoon's speaker, Reuben Snake, is deputy director of the Intertribal Development Corporation in Winnebago. He has been active in the tribe's land claims fight in the courts, and was a participant in the takeover of Mt. Rushmore by Indians last year.

Indian week speakers will be in the Nebraska Union, unless otherwise noted

Uppity Women Unite

An unlikely coalition of women have decided to form a new umbrella organization to give women a more significant voice in University affairs.

And, they have called a meeting for Monday at 9 p.m. in the Nebraska Union for all women students to set up the preliminary structure of the organization and gauge feeling about the new idea.

Representatives from the now defunct Association of Women Students (AWS), Panhellenic, University Women's Action Group, Association for Birth Control, the Student Y, and Mortar Board met this week to consider the new group, said Betty Munson, one of the organizers.

They agreed that such an organization is necessary to implement programs for the benefit of women, she said.

The representatives were also interested in the funds which were left in the AWS treasury when AWS died. These funds, amounting to $4,500, are being held by the Office of Student Activities.

Student Activities has informed several women's organizations that none of them is truly representative of all University women, and that they could not receive the funds, Munson said.
