

Seminar needs upperclassmen

Upperclassmen are needed to lead groups in next year's new Freshman Seminar program.

The Seminar was designed to help "develop the freshman's commitment to his own educational process", provide intercultural and international contact, and orientate freshmen to campus activities and resources, according to Paula Peter, spokesman for the project.

She said the Seminar idea, which originated in ASUN's Human Rights Committee last fall, is based on a similar program at Kansas State University. Black Studies Coordinator Lodi Rhodes, who had experience with the program at Kansas State, and Assistant Director of Admissions Lawrence Bundy assisted in organizing the Seminar.

Descriptions of the program were sent to all of next year's freshman students with their pre-registration materials.

The students will be broken into 10 groups for weekly meetings. Upperclassman coordinators, to be chosen by an interviewing committee will lead the groups.

The students will direct their courses under advisement from one of five faculty members. The coordinators will receive three hours of credit and the freshmen will get one hour under independent studies in his faculty member's department.

Interviews for the undergraduate coordinator positions will be held Monday and Wednesday evenings, May 17 and 18. Interested students may obtain interview appointments and information in the ASUN office, room 334 of the Nebraska Union.
