Southeast Asia is not in the University of Nebraska at Lincoln, but the University is inextricably located in the world. There is an objective reality.)

The point that I am sadly trying to make is that the Regents seem very willing to have moral scruples when it

University credit. How can the University give blanket sanction to the "educational activities" of "teachers" whose highest loyalties are at least legally to the President of the United States and consequently have killed persons in Southeast Asia? I've been acting under the presumption that a student's and teacher's ultimate loyalities are not at least stated as being to truth no matter whether it comes in a legal or illegal form; or in nationalistic or non-nationalistic form. The truth about loyalty in the ROTC experience comes from the President and the Pentagon. The truth about loyalty in a University supposedly may be found in other sources.

The patent inconsistencies and hypocrisies of the University are disturbing to the fabric of moral sensibilities. I grow tired of the seeming silent members of this community are seriously and playfully in pursuit of truth even if some inconvenience occurs. I'd like to think that persons are not willing to let an institution determine their consciousness. Perhaps that thought attempt at intellectual Muzak.

Last week students and concerned citizens held a peaceful demonstration on the steps of the State Capitol building. The demonstration was in the form of an open hearing concerning Sen. John DeCamp's resolution calling for a time-table withdrawal of U.S. oops from Vietnam.

The open hearing was held for a number of reasons. One of the main reasons was that some senators felt that many Nebraskans were very emotionally involved with this resolution and the issue behind it, the war.

As you may or may not recall (some like to forget that not all demonstrations are violent, revolutionary acts), the demonstrations was peaceful. In fact, the senator chairing the committee, Terry Carpenter, and others, applauded the crowd of over 2,000 for their decorum and respectful conduct during the outdoor hearing.

As a result of the interest shown by citizens and perhaps also as a result of the decorum shown during the peaceful demonstration, a number of senators on the Judicary Committee will be introducing a resolution similar to the DeCamp resolution Friday. morning.

Since the resolution will be introduced Friday morning, there is a 90 per cent chance that the resolution will be voted on Monday morning. May 17. There has been no speculation yet, but this may be the most significant document to ever come from the floor of the Unicameral.

That being the case, it will be extremely important that as much concern is shown for this bill as was shown for the DeCamp resolution.

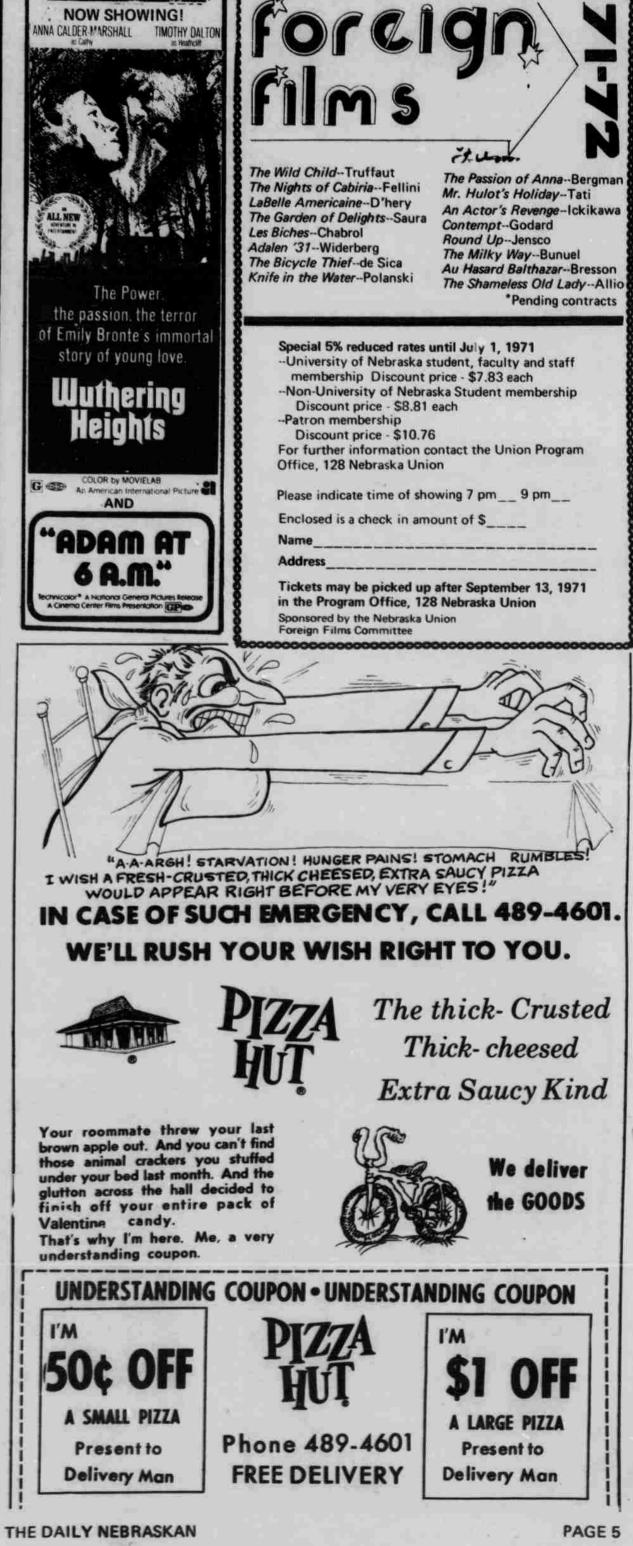

Over 2,000 people went to the hearing last week. There is no reason that the same number can't appear at the legislature this Monday in quiet support of the new peace resolution. After all, as one senator pointed out last week, the state capitol is only 6 blocks from a university of 20,000 students and yet very few students are concerned enough to go to the capitol and watch their government operate. No doubt that admonition also applies to faculty members and administrators who talk about the issues, but don't spend much time looking at what their government is doing about them. Vietnam is a perfect example of what happens when the citizenry does not responsibly observe the government. If there ever was a day to watch the legislature operate it will be Monday, if the resolution follows the anticipated time schedule.
