

Hibler enlists aid in financing fight

It's been a little over a week since assistant English Professor David J. Hibler decided to try and enlist the help of the federal government in securing refinancing for his rural Unadilla home.

Hibler had unsuccessfully contacted 20 leading institutions. None were interested in financing rural, non-farm loans.

After learning about a Senate sub-committee hearing on rural development, which was held last Friday, Hibler spent a fast two days accumulating nine months of formal rejections on his loan application.

His unscheduled testimony at the hearing, coming in the form of a 25-page document detailing his difficulties in getting a rural, non-farm mortgage, has led to one local savings and loan association "bending over backwards" to help, he said.

Although Hibler wanted to appear at the hearing in person, advance scheduling would not permit it. He did, however, flag down sub-committee chairman Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D-Minn) at the Nebraska Center (where the hearing was held) and give him the

Humphrey later noted it would be included as part of the committee's official record.

It seems contradictory, Hibler said, that while rural financing is so difficult to obtain, national leaders are "raising a hue and clamor over the migration of population out of the country into the cities..."

Hibler asked the committee to investigate "leading policies and/or prejudices of banks and savings and loan associations regarding rural properties, both farm and non-farm."

His actions, he assured, were not intended to embarrass lending institutions, but rather to point out a problem.

Hibler suspects refinancing for his three year country home will eventually be arranged.

The government has projected 8,000 fewer jobs for elementary teachers and predicted the slump will last for at least another five years.

How has the declining birth rate affected Nebraska?

number of UNL Teachers College graduates seeking employment has more than doubled.

And according to figures gathered by Lee DeJonge, director of placement at Teachers College, 40.8 per cent of last spring's UNL teaching graduates are still seeking employment.

This year's results follow a trend of the last several years. Graduates in 1968 found the job market more inviting. Then, only 19.3 per cent were seeking contracts after graduation. The unemployed swelled to 24.6 per cent in June 1969, and 27.9 per cent in 1970.

EGBERT BEGAN his in 1948 as an instructor of psychology at Triple Cities College at Endicott N. Y. He held several other research and teaching posts, including professor of educational psychology and chairman of the Graduate Department of Education at Brigham Young University, before joining the U.S. Office of Education.

In 1967, he became director of the Follow Through program of the U.S. Office of Education in Washington. This program was designed to sustain and supplement gains made by children from Head Start or similar pre-school programs.

contribute to the program on their tuition statements.

INTERVIEWS for a position on the Student Publications Board will be held by ASUN in the Nebraska Union Sunday beginning at 7 p.m.

The rule that ASUN senators can't miss more than three meetings without showing cause prior to the meeting will be enforced this year, according to Fowler.

Senators absent without excuse at Wednesday's meeting were Jonette Beaver from Business Administration, Cindy Follis from Home Economics and Marty Liggitt from Graduates and Professionals.

Time Out discusses human sexuality

by H. J. Cummins

A time out conference for discussing human sexuality will usher in October on the UNL campus, said student Patti Kaminski, chairman of this fall's conference.

Entitled "Time Out-Human Sexuality," the annual ASUN conference has taken on "all new proportions," Kaminski said.

Entirely new for the October 5-8 conference according to Kaminski, is an emphasis on small group discussions "before, during and after the conference."

"It's not that speakers aren't cool. But listening to them is only one part of the educational process," she added.

Kaminski said she believes individual discussions are important because they increase the benefits to participants by "getting it down to their own level."

Talking to peers and resource people about an issue forces a person to become involved, Kaminski contended, no longer allowing them to be only "spectators," as she said students have been in past conferences.

So pre-conference rap groups are being organized in living units, classes and "any group of two or more," Kaminski explained.

She said she will act as a general liaison supplying the rap groups with helpful reading material or speakers on the conference topics: women's liberation, men's liberation, gay liberation, the male-female dichotomy, family planning, abortion and population control.

Interested persons should assemble their own groups, Kaminski continued. If that is impossible for some individuals, she promised to try to help place them.

Gay liberation speakers for groups can be scheduled by calling David McIntosh, 475-5380; men's liberation, by calling Charles Armstrong, 432-4060, or Larry Sheffield, 488-2710; and any other topic by calling Kaminski, 472-2563. Also, films and tapes scheduled for late September will help inform students as well as build enthusiasm for the conference," Kaminski said.

The ASUN senator said guests who will speak in the ballroom include: Diane Schuller, a feminist American Civil Liberties Union lawyer, Lorna and Phillip Sarrel, founders of a sex counseling clinic at Yale University; Del Martin and Phyllis Lyon, and Jack Baker and Mike McConnell, two gay couples; and Benjamin DeMott, social commentator and author of Survive in the Seventies.
