probation, deflection of alcoholics and addicts to medical programs, and improved parole systems. These programs have decreased the populations in state and Federal prisons from 230,000 10 years ago to 190,000 today.

BUT IT HAS also distilled the population into a hard core, many of whom have been convicted of violent crimes, and it has seen a sharply increased proportion of minority prisoners.

"No matter what we do, we lose," says one Federal corrections officer. "The outlook is grim and getting grimmer."
