

Pub Board appoints coordinator

In a continuing effort to effectively administer the use of the student fees the UNL publications board has appointed a coordinator of business affairs for The Daily Nebraskan and the Cornhusker.

The job of the coordinator, according to James T. Horner, Professor of Agricultural Education and board chairman, is to direct the business operations of the two publications. Included in the job is direction of bookkeeping, billing, subscriptions, circulation, purchasing, payroll and general office maintenance.

Horner said the board searched for someone to fill the job who had professional business training and experience.

The Board appointed Jerri Haussler, a 1968 graduate of Nebraska Wesleyan University with a degree in Business Education. Her experience includes a year of teaching and several jobs with business firms.

Horner said that of the dozen applicants she was the most qualified for the position.

"The board takes the job of administering student fees seriously," he said.

A professional coordinator provides continuity between student staffs, which change each semester, he said. These changes of staff in the past have cost the publications money from advertising bills which were not collected.

Horner added that though the Cornhusker gets no student fees the board is still interested in having an efficient and effective business operation for the yearbook.
