student fee issue. In court Tuesday, the two students attempted to block student fee support for the Time-Out and World Revolution Conferences and The Daily Nebraskan.

Three members of CSL were appointed to "sort through the student fee question" and report Thursday to the Council with recommendations on how to proceed.

There currently isn't an organization on campus where individuals can appeal the use of student fees, said Council member Ely Meyerson, interim executive dean of Student Affairs.

Another ruling said the only reason for restricting an off-campus speaker is if there is imminent danger the speaker will cause unlawful actions.

WRIGHT ARGUES THAT the plaintiff must show either a potential of great or irreparable damage or a need for personal relief to get an order. He added that the $3000 used for the conference is not enough to be considered a matter of great or irreparable damage and the plaintiffs had not shown a need of personal relief.

The action against the conference can only be taken as an act of censorship, Wright said.

Prior restraint of speech is not allowed under the Constitution, he said. And the burden of proof of imminent danger is strong on those who seek such restraints, Wright added.

In his statement on refusing to issue the order Judge Ronin said there are "rather impelling precedents on these matters which uphold the first amendment." He added that it is not for the court to decide whether the conference is in good taste.

A HEARING FOR a permanent injunction against the use of fees for conferences and publications is to be scheduled in the near future. No date has been set for a hearing on a similar move by State Senator Terry Carpenter of Scottsbluff.
