Unfortunately, while many do, she said, many others do not.

She voiced strong support for the concept of a special University counselorcoordinator for the handicapped. She envisioned the position not as one where the person would do things for the handicapped but more a central office dispensing information and possibly making arrangements for outside activities, like doctor and dentist appointments. New student orientation and personal counseling would be two other functions of a counselor.

Janet Crouse, a special assistant in the office of Student Affairs who last year compiled a report on problems of the handicapped on campus, made a similar suggestion.

"We have enough facilities that we can do an awful lot more than we're doing now because our efforts aren't coordinated and the students are not aware."

John Coyle said that at this time he felt no pressing need for such an office.

Barb and Laurie were also cautious about the suggestion. Barb was hesitant to endorse anything which would make the handicapped a more separate group of students. "I don't think there needs to be a whole lot more to separate the handicapped people from the rest of the University," she said. "There's enough of that already."
