

Schramm Hall to vote on guest rights policy

by Randy Beam

Schramm Hall students will vote Tuesday on a student initiated proposal which "affirms the right of Schramm Hall residents to determine their own guest rights policy," and which would "supersede all previous and/or conflicting policies," according to a copy of the policy statement.

Support for the proposal appeared split at a hall meeting late last week, attended by about 100 students.

The proposal will go into effect as stated after being approved by 3/5 of Schramm's residents and will remain in effect until at least half of the residents approve an alternate or amended policy.

Organizer for the proposal, Bob Brehm, called it "a prelude to our own policy." Although skeptical that recent overtures by the Board of Regents regarding modification of current dormitory visitation policies would be satisfactory, Brehm said it was his plan to wait three or four months to "see if what the Regents are doing is reasonable" before trying to initiate an independent visitation policy for the hall—all this if the policy to be voted on Tuesday passes.

Centennial College RHA representative Bill Fruedenburg said the proposal was just a technical point which might "get people mad without really accomplishing anything."

Contacted Sunday, Roger Story, Residence Halls Association (RHA) president, said, for the most part, it's always been considered the right of the living unit to establish its own visitation policy within guidelines set down by the University.

He said at this time, they do not have the right to establish policy outside those guidelines.

Story said he is not worried that passage of the proposal will complicate the current visitation picture.

It would be harmful, he asserted, only if Schramm residents tried to set up their own visitation rules not congruent with present University policy.

Story said he didn't think Schramm residents had that intention.

Although Story said RHA had taken no position on the proposal, an RHA representative said it had been discussed at a meeting and "the general mood of the meeting... was that very little good and much potential harm could come from it."

Brehm claims while he does not have the endorsement of the Schramm student government, he does have backing from many individual floor representatives.

A small group of students from Selleck Quadrangle at the meeting said while a poll of undergraduate residents showed that 95 per cent of 500 students responding at the 600-resident hall favored a visitation policy change, they didn't think residents could be motivated to adopt a proposal similar to Schramm's.

poll of parental opinion.

At a recent Regents meeting, University President D. B. Varner suggested that if 50 per cent of the parents approve of proposed modification in the coed visitation policy, then the policy changes should be put into effect.

Story is one of two student representatives appointed to the Regents committee which is charged with writing a new coed visitation policy and polling students and parents to learn if the modifications would be acceptable.

Letter urges students to explain visitation

In a letter distributed this week, on-campus students are asked to take advantage of the Thanksgiving holiday to explain the status of coed visitation to their parents, according to Roger Story, president of the Residence Hall Association.

At a meeting of representatives from ASUN, Greek houses and cooperatives, it was decided that students should explain to parents the importance of the Board of Regents' committee on coed visitation and the upcoming
