RD's-new visitation policy promotes student cooperation

The modified Residence Hall Association (RHA) visitation policy is working well according to 11 of the 12 UNL residence hall directors (RD's). The 11 all said there has been no increase in violations, and in six of the halls there has been a decrease.

The modifications were announced Feb. 27 by UNL Chancellor James Zumberge. The changes removed requirements that a certain percentage of visitation hours be devoted to educational or social activities. The modifications also allow floor officers to sponsor visitation. Previously, sponsors had to be faculty, staff or parents.

Dori Bush, Smith Hall RD, said the residents are "more cooperative with the new policy." Students will obey reasonable rules, she said.

Abel Hall RD, Gregg Snodgrass, said students are more willing to cooperate. "They believe they were not put down by the compromise. Most students believe the chancellor and the Board of Regents did all they could. The regents and Zumberge used good judgement in heading off a potentially bad situation," he said.

He said Abel Hall residents were taking advantage of the modifications.

"Most seem very happy with the changes. There aren't any students who are asking for more liberalization, even though they would like it," he said.

Milt Woody, Harper Hall RD, said students are limiting themselves beyond what the policy allows.

"Some floors are being less lenient than the policy allows," he said. "This is a phenomenon. I was expecting every floor to have as many visitation hours as possible," he said.

He said the "open door" section of the policy remains difficult to enforce, but students are violating it less than before the modifications were implemented.

"The students are showing themselves to be reasonable enough to handle what they've been given" he said.

He said he hopes there will be further changes next year. "The open door is physically and legally impossible to enforce," he said. "I hope the regents and the chancellor will try to change the rule, but until they do we'll enforce it as well as possible."
