the pipe, and spoke of his future plans.

Russell Means is going home to stay this summer.

After years as director of the Indian Center in Cleveland, Ohio, Means said in Gordon Wednesday he is tired of visiting his home and people only during vacations, so this summer he will move back to the Oglala Sioux reservation at Pine Ridge, S.D.

"I never really wanted to leave here."

He was in Gordon, 50 miles south of Pine Ridge, in his capacity as national coordinator of the American Indian Movement (AIM). AIM led a two-day occupation by Indians of the Community Building in Gordon to protest the local investigation of a fellow Oglala Sioux's death there Feb. 20.

The protesters went back to Pine Ridge Wednesday after what Means called an "unqualified success."

Before leaving for Pine Ridge the Indians removed the red and white flag of the Oglala Sioux Nation and a sacred pipe which had been placed on a stage in the Community Building during the sit-in.

In a solemn, quiet ceremony, tribal leaders sat in a circle to smoke the pipe. Means told the Indians they won their battle with the white man because of the power of Means is scheduled to visit UNL Friday for a World in Revolution Conference function. He will participate in a six-member panel discussion on Third World Justice in the Nebraska Union Centennial Room at 10 a.m.

He visited the University last April, when he talked about Indian religion.

For 25,000 years Indians had a "Garden of Eden" in America, he said then. "Indians believe all living things come from our mother the earth. She gives us the green things, the winged things of the air, the two-legged and the four-legged. All living things come from one mother, and we are all brothers."

"But of all creatures, the only things without direction are the two-legged. For this reason, the Indian people said to themselves: 'We are cursed with the power of reason.' So Indians took hints from the things around them," Means said.

"They tried to follow the life-styles of the other living things. If you follow the Indians' way of thinking, man is inferior to all other living things, not superior, as the white man's technology would lead you to believe."
