Western Days ride slowly into sunset

UNL's Western Days ended with the thump of a calf hitting the dust and the whoop of a happy rider as over 200 cowboys and cowgirls from 21 schools and eight states competed in the University of Nebraska Rodeo Association's (UNRA) annual intercollegiate rodeo Friday and Saturday.

National College of Business rodeo team members captured the most titles. The Rapid City, S. D., students took first place in bareback and saddle bronc riding and ribbon roping. The girls won in breakaway roping and goat tying.

In other areas: calf-roping (men) 1st place-Black Hills State College; steer wrestling and bull riding (men) 1st place-University of North Dakota-Williston; barrel racing (girls)-tie for 1st place-South Dakota State University and Black Hills State College.

In bull riding Kurt Richardson took second place for UNL, Greg Phifer-third; and Tom Frazer sixth. Frazer also placed third in bareback-bronc riding. Betty Gergens rounded out UNRA's team score with a sixth place in barrel racing.

Kathy Maddux was selected Rodeo Queen and will reign until next year's rodeo.

Vicki Selman and Paul Tierney, both from the National College of Business, were named best all-around cowgirl and cowboy, respectively. NCB also took the girls' team trophy while Black Hills State College was first in the men's division.

The rodeo was the fifth in a series sponsored annually by the University's 150-member Rodeo Association.

Of special interest to many experienced rodeo fans was the ribbon roping contest. In this event a rider ropes a calf from his horse. As the noose settles around the calf he leaps to the ground and unties a ribbon on the animal's tail.

The cowboy then has to run the ribbon back to the starting gate.

For those not so well acquainted with hemp cord and saddles, the wild cow race offered a problem more easily understood. Some 20 head of bawling, normally placid cows were forced into the arena by the UNL cowboys. Down at the other end of the ring 15 to 20 amateur men were turned loose with saddles and tennis shoes.

The amateurs confused each other and the bovines in their attempts to saddle a cow and ride her to the judges' stand.

These two events were only part of the action in the Fairgrounds Coliseum. "Junior" Young, one of the best clowns in professional rodeo, played a death dance with Brahma bulls during the bull riding contest and took up the slack in the entertainment between events.

Five Indian dancers and four singers from the Penal Complex reminded the audience that cowboys didn't know everything about the West.
