

Varner aide will promote cultural events

by Carolyn Hull

University President D.B. Varner, in an attempt to promote fine arts programs at the University and across the state, has appointed Vaughn Jaenike as his special assistant for the arts.

Jaenike will coordinate information about cultural events on a state-wide basis. His position, he said last week, will create a channel for the University and people of Nebraska to work through when trying to attract performing arts groups to the state.

"So much of what goes on in the fine arts at the University that could be shared with the rest of the state just has not been shared," Jaenike said.

"I see the office as a clearing house for all that goes on in the performing arts of gathering information and giving it out again. I'll be coordinating tours of existing groups within the state, sharing events among the campuses and generally keeping lines of communication open among various groups throughout the state," Jaenike said.

"My role is as a liaison person to coordinate University activities with what happens in the community," Jaenike said.

The office also will assist in securing financial support for programs.

Jaenike and Varner announced last week that pianist Grant Johannesen and his wife, cellist Zara Nelsova, will be giving 20 single and joint performances across the state during the next year.

"We're interested in sharing the services of these distinguished artists with outstate communities," Jaenike said. They will appear as a duo in their first four concerts, to be held in Lincoln and Omaha, he said. Following those concerts, Jaenike said he hopes performances can be slated in outstate communities.

Jaenike said the Johannesens will be available occasionally between performances for seminars and lessons.

He said his office is also trying to attract a nationally recognized theater group and a chamber orchestra to Nebraska for short residencies.

Jaenike's office is being funded with a one-year grant compiled from both public and private sources. Consequently, he said, much is being done to insure that what is accomplished this year will be able to continue.

"I am working with the idea of making what I do self-sustaining," he said. "I work with a concern for self-perpetuation, since the post is being thought of as temporary."

Upon dissolution of his position, his duties hopefully will be carried on by groups like the Mid-America Arts Council and the University's Cultural Affairs Committee, according to Jaenike.

"UNL already is ahead of most campuses by just having a Cultural Affairs Committee composed of both faculty and students which compares to a community arts council," he said.

Also working with Jaenike will be Mrs. Curtis Kimball, who will coordinate visual arts for the University.

advising system didn't appear as lacking as she expected it would.

She said the survey confirmed that the most important factor in the learning process is not class structure, but the teacher.

Survey results have been routed for evaluation to the Dean's Executive Committee and all department heads.

George said there is a possibility for follow-up work in some areas the survey dealt with, but no definite plans have been made for such work.
