Babysitting available game days

Students from the University's day care center at the United Ministries in Higher Education chapel are sponsoring a babysitting service for Saturday football games. Interested parents may bring their children to 333 No. 14th after 11 a.m.
 The student volunteers are charging a minimum of 75 cents an hour to help fund the day care center, which provides a weekday babysitting service for the children of low income UNL students.

Many of the workers are on a work-study program and are trained and experienced in working with infants, according to Mary Jo Ryan, coordinator.

Ryan said the center is currently in financial straits and is opening up the football game service to raise money.

The center serves approximately 30 children each week day.

Wage bill fate still undecided

No action has yet been taken on a dispute between the U.S. Senate and House versions of bills which would raise the federal minimum wage.

Should congressional approval come before adjournment, 52 million American workers could receive a pay raise before year's end.

The Senate version calls for an immediate increase of the minimum wage from $1.60 to $2.20 per hour. The Senate bill would add seven million workers to the 45 million already covered by the minimum wage law.

Although the House-approved bill calls for raising the minimum wage to $2 over a two-year period, it provides for reduced minimums for young workers.

Specifically, the House version lets employers pay only 80 per cent of the minimum wage for 16-to-18-year-olds, for students in the 18-to-20 year bracket and for nonstudents in the 18-to-20-year bracket during their first six months of employment.

Normal procedure calls for a Senate-House conference committee to work out differences between the bills.

But the House, in a rare move, voted to reject the conferees selected by Rep. Carl Perkins, D-Ky., chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee.

According to a spokesman in Rep. Charles Thone's office, six of the 10 conferees chosen by Perkins favored the Senate version of the bill and would put up no fight for the House provisions.

Thone voted for the House bill, Vicky Peckham, an aide in his Washington office, said. He also voted to reject the proposed conferees.

Thone's opponent in the November election, Darrell Berg, could not be reached for comment on his position on the bill.

As yet, Perkins has not presented a new list of proposed conferees.

The Senate bill would add federal, state and local government employes, domestic, retail workers in chain stores, and 100,000 additional farm workers under federal minimum wage law.

That bill would force overtime pay not presently required for some employes.

It's believed the question of expanded coverage might be compromised if the Senate agreed to exempt public employes from overtime rights.

The reduced wage provision in the House bill promises to be a more difficult question to settle, sources say.

Peckham said Thone's office had received numerous calls from Nebraskans urging him to support the lower minimum wage for the young.

Sentiment indicated that hiring young workers would be more difficult if the wage was raised too high, and would work against students because of the transient nature of their jobs.
