Student Affairs offers consumer advice

In an effort to help students, the Office of Student Affairs is advising them about where to get information on business deals they are considering.

"We are now open in a limited way," according to Ron Gierhan, student affairs coordinator for the program. "We have collected information and can advise a student or tell him where to go to get help.

"We are not trying to tell students whether or not they should buy or invest," he continued. "We are just encouraging students to check prices and we can give them additional information."

Gierhan said a proposal was made last spring to provide students with a place where they can get information before they enter business deals or sign contracts.

Since the age of majority dropped to 19, it is especially important that students understand what they are buying before signing contracts, he said.

Meanwhile, Gierhan said his office is not trying to duplicate the Better Business Bureau, but is trying to help protect the student consumer.

Gierhan said the presence of one firm involved in legal but misleading sales operations on campus last spring triggered formation of the consumer information center.

R & I registration deadlines near

Registration deadlines for classes sponsored by the Recreation Department are approaching quickly.

Sept. 21 is the final date to register for the scuba class.

The deadline for enrolling in macrame, decoupage and creative jewelry making classes is Sept. 22.

Registration for the glass-blowing class ends Sept. 23.

The Recreation Department is also sponsoring a canoe trip down the Elkhorn River Sept. 23-25. The deadline for signing up is Sept. 22. Cost is $8.50.

Students may register for all classes and the canoe trip at the Recreation Office, 1740 Vine Street.
