

Closed regents meeting will rehash bylaws

The Board of Regents is scheduled to finish its rehash of the University Governance Commission Report—better known as the University Bylaws—in a closed session Friday in Omaha.

A public hearing on the bylaws, originally scheduled for this weekend, will be held within 10 days following the board's final revision of the document.

Couched in dry legal terms, the bylaws represent the regulations which govern the University.

Governance Commission member James Lake said it is "nearly impossible" to define the changes between the "new" bylaws and the "old" bylaws—before the Governance

Commission's revisions.

"We had such long, drawn-out, tedious and agonizing discussions before anybody attempted to change the bylaws, involving thousands of little changes and very subtle larger changes. Actually, the changes the Governance Commission made represent a change in emphasis more than a change in philosophy," Lake commented.

Lake said many of the revisions in the bylaws were needed to update the document to the current structure of the University.

"UNO didn't exist in the bylaws before we changed it," Lake said.

General topics dealt with by the Governance Commission Report include:

- Who gets hired for teaching and by whom;
- The role of faculty government;
- The role of student government;
- Student rights;
- The division of power between the Administration and the Board of Regents;
- Faculty retirement and vacations;
- Faculty evaluation;
- Academic freedom.

East Union Committee considers environment

Environmental impact on the surrounding area has been a prime consideration in plans for the construction of the new East Union according to Ken Wiseman, chairman of the Nebraska Union planning committee.

Wiseman said an internationally renowned architect has been recommended to the regents for design of the new East Union. He said he felt the architect probably would give more consideration to designing a building which "fits in" with the environment and existing architecture than a local architect.

"Generally, in the past, the lowest cost per square foot has been given absolutely number one priority," he said.

Regents traditionally have awarded architectural contracts to local firms.

Gunner Birkerts, professor of architecture at the University of Michigan, has been recommended by the committee. Birkerts previously has been honored as Young Designer of the Year by the Akron Institute of Art.
