Y-Pals—someone to be with

A "little brother" can swim and play football, eat supper, watch television or just plain talk to a Y-Pal.

Jim Gump and Greg Hickman are two volunteers in the YWCA's Y-Pal program.

Gump, a UNL gymnast and speech communications major, is a Y-Pal to 9-year-old Eric Starkweather.

Gump said he learned about the Y-Pal program from the Lincoln Volunteer Bureau, which along with the UNL Volunteer Bureau, finds people interested in helping "little" brothers or sisters.

Hickman, a former UNL student who campaigns for McGovern, said his little brother, nine-year-old Ken Coy, is the lone male in a family of 10.

Hickman, who grew up without a father said he believes he can help Ken with the problems that the lack of a brother or father can cause.

Hickman said he heard about the Y-Pal program from a friend working in juvenile court.

Hickman said he's seen Ken at least once a week for two months.

What do the Y-Pals get out of the time spent with their little brother?

Hickman said there is a certain age when children haven't learned to be dishonest or cute—"they're very blunt."

Because of this, he said, the companionship provides a "recharging of batteries."

Gump said there is the "personal satisfaction of knowing I'm helping Eric in some way."
