

Union staff relocates 'nauseating' artwork

A dispute over a piece of artwork in the Nebraska Union Crib apparently has been resolved by moving it.

According to Art Thompson, assistant Union program manager, a student, John Olig, complained that the piece of art in the northwest corner of the south Crib was nauseating and he wanted it taken down.

However, the Art Department, which supplies the pictures as a service to the Union, said if it was taken down, other pieces in the Union would go with it.

Thompson said the problem was solved by moving the picture.

Olig complained because he and some other friends habitually sit in the corner of the crib where the art was hung.

Thompson explained that the art pieces in the Crib are provided "with an educational purpose in mind. The idea was to expose students to different types of artwork."

The art department, he said, objected to removing the picture because the department opposed any form of censorship of its selections.

The work was done by Dennis Kuronen, a graduate art student, who Art Department chairman Robert Spense described as one of his best students.

"It's sort of funny," Kuronen said upon learning the reaction to his creation. "Art history is filled with incidents with people being outraged over a piece of art, but that sort of thing just doesn't happen anymore."

Legal Rights Committee meets to hear tenant complaints

Numerous UNL students' complaints about tenant-landlord relations in Lincoln have prompted a special meeting of the ASUN Legal Rights Committee at 7 p.m. tonight in the Nebraska Union, according to Chairman Frosty Anderson.

At least 12 students have complained about relations with one landlord during the past week, according to UNL Ombudsman James Suter.

"The charges have run the gamut from failure to return damage deposits to an insufficient fund check." He added that between $75 and $100 usually is involved in each case.

"The number of responses (to a Daily Nebraskan announcement to call Suter about problems with landlords) is indicative that something may be wrong," Suter said.

Tonight's meeting is "to bring together students who believe they have a basis for complaint concerning any Lincoln landlord and, to discuss alternatives and possibly initiate legal action," Anderson said.

The legal rights chairman said the committee plans to establish an office so that students can call about landlord problems and obtain advice about legal action.

He noted that the ASUN Tenants' Rights Handbook which discusses tenant-landlord relations and renting procedures is available at the ASUN office.

Queen elections today in unions

Students may vote today for the 1972 Homecoming Queen, who will be crowned at halftime at the Nebraska-Oklahoma State football game Saturday at Memorial Stadium.

Students enrolled in the Colleges of Home Economics, Agriculture and Dentistry must vote between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. at the East Campus Union.

Other students can vote during the same hours at the Nebraska Union on city campus.

Voter registration deadline Friday

Friday is the deadline for registering to vote in the November 7 general election. Students registering to vote in Lancaster County can do so in the election commissioner's office at the City-County Building at 10th and J Streets.

Centennial seeks new applicants

The Centennial Educational Program now is accepting applications for second semester, available at 540 N. 16 from Sally Gordon.
