

Appeals rule added to CSL procedures

by Adella Wacker

The Council of Student Life procedural rules were readied for approval next week, including final changes made at Thursday night's regular meeting.

A clause was included to allow direct appeals to CSL in emergencies without first going through the Council Appeals Committee, which is usually necessary.

This was done mainly as a result of Kathy Smith's appeal for an emergency CSL session after her second attendant spot in the October 27 Homecoming Queen election was temporarily eliminated.

A clause insuring follow-up of CSL committee recommendations was also inserted, designating main responsibility to the CSL chairman.

A good deal of time CSL spent throwing out ideas and approaches to draw out needed areas for CSL involvement.

This came after a suggestion that CSL meetings be held bi-monthly instead of weekly, mainly in an effort to stay away from the "having to make business" syndrome.

Council members agreed other means should be sought to maintain CSL as a potent force on campus.

Reviving the "quality of student life" approach taken when CSL was first created was suggested.

This would include attempting to sift ideas from Specific groups—married students, for example.

The council decided to extend an invitation to all students to present their concerns about the quality of student life at 7 p.m. next Thursday.

Ombudsman Jim Suter will be at that meeting. A preliminary parking study also is to be presented.
