University Studies approved by A & S

The Arts and Sciences college faculty last week gave the go-ahead to the University Studies program. University Studies will provide an opportunity for individualized curriculum and degree requirements set by student and faculty advisers.

It will provide maximum flexibility in designing programs to fit needs and interests of the students, according to John Scholz, program director. The program will waive group and hour requirements for graduation and the requirement that a student have a major.

According to Scholz, courses will be offered during the coming spring session. Two such courses will deal with "human biology" and "writing and the forms of knowledge."

"A lot of the courses will be independent studies and tutorials," Scholz said. "Entry will be by permission, and we are attempting to contact interested students beginning now."

Because there are no set requirements for a degree, the program is looking for "responsible, active students" according to Scholz.

To insure that each student acquires a substantial fund of knowledge, a concentration in a particular field of study will be required.

Students also might take special courses offered as part of the University Studies Program or undertake a supervised adjunct project such as field work, study abroad or job experience for at least one summer.

Scholz said students should contact him about admission to the program.

The University is dabbling in communications again. It's gone and cut off every good reason for not writing home short of breaking your arm.

What it's done is provide space for the U.S. Postal Service to erect a station on campus; right there on the corner of 14th and U Streets, across from the State Museum.

The postal station will be self-service. It will dispense stamps, provide a scale, act as a collection point for packages—in short, do everything but handle money orders, certified mail and give you a smile and a "thank you" when you're done.

Not only that, there will be a direct line to the main Post Office for questions.

The station isn't operational yet, although it was scheduled to be completed Sept. 1. University officials say it should be doing all the things it is capable of by Christmas.
