

Resolution affirms parking policy

A resolution approved by the ASUN Senate last Wednesday hopefully would assure that existing parking policies are followed and enforced, according to its sponsor, Todd McDaniel.

McDaniel said the policy states that after a student receives ten unpaid parking tickets, his car is towed in and his parking permit (if he has one) is revoked.

"Yet we have students who have accumulated $230 worth of parking fines," McDaniel said. "Evidently these policies are not being enforced."

Gail Gade, UNL Campus Security chief, admitted that he hasn't revoked any parking permits yet, although "it's always something we could use." However, Gade said students' cars have been towed in.

Gade said he believes towing a student's car in is a favor to the student. "Otherwise it would be very easy for a student to build up a large fine."

However, Gade said, it still is possible for some students to accumulate large fines.

"If a student has an out-of-state license, there is really no way we can identify him. We can't send him a reminder after each ticket like we do to everyone else, because we don't know who he is," Gade said. "About all we can do is watch the car and if the tickets build up on it, tow it in."

Gade said next year parking policies would include a paragraph defining the tow-in ruling stating that when a car is towed in, it cannot be released until the fines are paid.

Currently, Gade said, there is such a policy, but "it is not clear enough to strictly enforce."

The resolution, as introduced by McDaniel, would make sure that all policies were enforced and would ask that an accumulated fine limit be set, after which the car must be towed in.
