

UNL's microwave ovens don't leak radiation-Haes

UNL students are not in danger of radiation leaking from microwave ovens used in vending machine areas, according to Julius Haes Jr., radiation safety officer for University Health services.

Haes' statement was in response to an Associated Press report that researchers in Mount Vernon, N.Y., found "measurable radiation leakage from the 15 most popular microwave ovens."

There are 11 microwave ovens for public use at UNL. Haes said each oven's radiation level is clocked every six months.

"The Bureau of Radiological Health has set specific standards for microwave ovens. All units on this campus are well below the maximum radiation level allowable," he said.

Haes said the microwave oven isn't a new invention. There has been at least one used on campus for 15 years, he added.

Deadline close for national teaching exams

Students planning to take the national teacher examinations at UNL must be registered no later than March 15, according to Lee De Jonge, director of teacher placement.

Information bulletins and registration forms may be obtained from the teacher placement office, Teachers College 106, or from National Teacher Examinations, Educational Testing Service, Box 911, Princeton, N.J., 08540.

The completed registration forms should be sent to that address.

At the April 7 test session, a candidate may take the common examinations, including tests in professional and general education, and one of the 27 teaching area examinations applicable to the area which he wishes to teach.

The common examinations are to begin at 8:30 a.m. and the teaching area examinations at 1:30 p.m.
