

Trips to Mexico, Japan to be offered in summer

"Nebraska students are really beginning to know how much they can experience in the rest of the world," according to Zoya Zeman, coordinator of the Overseas Opportunities Center.

She said she hopes this realization will encourage UNL students to sign up for travel-study flights to Mexico and Japan this summer.

The University-sponsored trips are open to all UNL students and faculty and their immediate families, Zeman said. Credit courses will be offered or students can make the trips without participating in the study program, she said.

Kathy Farrell, program assistant for the flights, said criminal justice 480, geography 300 and Spanish 300 will be offered on the Mexican trip. She said a Spanish course might be added.

The trip, May 21-June 7, will cost each participant under $500 for accommodations, tuition and the flight, Farrell said.

Students who want more information should go to the Overseas Opportunities Center, 205 Nebraska Union, she said.

UNL faculty members Peter Cheng and Curtis Hayes are organizing the May 25-June 8 trip to Japan. Interested students should contact them.

Cheng will teach courses about Japanese and Far Eastern politics and Hayes will teach modern Japanese theater and literature, Zeman said.

She pointed out that both trips are before the summer session, so students also can attend summer school.

Students who desire to go to Europe this summer also can find help through the Overseas Center, Zeman said.

20 UNL juniors to study in Europe, Latin America

About 20 UNL students will spend their leisure time during the 1973-74 academic year exploring places such as Bordeaux, France, Regensburg, Germany, and Mexico City, Mexico.

They will be participating in the Study Abroad program coordinated by the University of Colorado in Boulder or a program initiated by the UNL Institute for International Studies.

In the Study Abroad program, juniors may attend the University of Bordeaux in France or the University of Regensburg in Germany according to Jane Dein, vice chairman of the UNL department of romance languages. UNL also participates with the University of Kansas in a program at the University of Bonn in Germany, she said.

Through the UNL Institute for International Studies program, juniors may attend the University of the Americas, the Universidad Ibero-Americana in Mexico or the University of Costa Rica in Central America, according to Institute Director Roberto Esquenazi-Mayo.

CU became part of the Study Abroad program in France in 1963; UNL joined in 1966, Dein said. The German program began in 1969 at CU.

This academic year is the first that UNL sent students to Germany, according to Mark Cory, a UNL assistant professor of German.

Eight UNL students will attend the University of Bordeaux in Bordeaux, France next year, she said.

The students will take courses—taught in French by French professors—which they've chosen from a list of "Courses for Foreigners" and regular university courses, Dein said.

Included in the "Courses for Foreigners" are French grammar, phonetics, history and art history and regular courses may include economics, philosophy, political science and international relations, she said.

The Study Abroad-Bordeaux participants will spend several days in Paris before traveling by bus to Bordeaux.

In Bordeaux, the students go through the "stage"—six weeks of intensive language review before beginning the regular academic year.

According to Dein, students in European universities receive less supervision and prodding than in American schools so students need initiative and self-discipline to do the necessary independent work.

While in France, students will live with families or in university dormitories, Dein said.

Seven UNL students are studying at Bordeaux this year. Dein said they seem enthusiastic in their letters about the program.

Five UNL students will take part in the Study Abroad-Germany program next year, Cory said. Three will study in Bonn and two in Regensburg, he said.

Four UNL students are now studying in Germany, three at the University of Bonn and one in Regensburg, he said.

Students in the European programs are evaluated by their professors on a pass/fail basis, Dein said. This is being changed for next year, she said, because some students were having problems with the pass/fail grades counting toward graduation.

Unlike the universities in the other programs, the Latin-American universities evaluate the students on a "A" through "F" scale, Esquenazi-Mayo said.

Prospective participants in the programs in Mexico and Costa Rica have filed applications and interviews are being held this week.

He said that students will live with families near the university they will attend. Two UNL students are now attending the University of the Americas in Pueblo, Mexico.

UNL began its programs in Mexico and Costa Rica in 1963, Esquenazi-Mayo said.

There are some characteristics that are the same for all three programs. In all the Study-Abroad programs, the credits earned by students during their studies abroad are transferable to UNL. In all programs, the cost for each student, excluding transportation, is about the same as a year at UNL.
