Bicycles

Bicycles provide one means of beating the gasoline shortage. Bike routes have been outlined below by the Lincoln Police Department, which are designed to avoid the more heavily-traveled streets.

Some routes lead to parks and recreation areas along shady and relatively flat routes. Other routes are for commuters, leading directly to the downtown business area.

No dry tanks in auto pool

The University auto pool is experiencing delays in getting gasoline, but no dry tanks yet, according to Ron Wright, assistant UNL controller.

"Fortunately, we don't have as much travel during the summer months as during the academic year," he said.

Wright said staff members and faculty have been asked to consolidate trips whenever possible, on a voluntary basis.

One source of gasoline in the past—gas pumps operated by the state roads department—are closed to University members traveling by car on official business across the state.

"We've been asked by the roads department not to use their pumps until we hear otherwise," Wright said.

Wright indicated the roads department was concerned about an adequate supply of gas for its emergency vehicles.

"I anticipate if things get bad around here that we'll have to tighten our belts, set priorities on which trips have to go and forego some others," he said.
