

Cultural Affairs remains penniless

A meeting Friday between Ken Bader, Vice chancellor of student affairs, and the Cultural Affairs Committee failed to improve the financial situation of the committee as Bader explained why funds couldn't be given to it.

The committee had expected to receive $8,000 from student fees this year. Ron Bowlin, coordinator of the committee, said Bader had strongly indicated it would be possible to get the fees.

Bader said Friday he was in favor of giving the committee funds, but that they simply weren't available.

The committee operated last year on a reserve of unallocated funds that had been built up over a period of three years. This year, Bader said, since the student fee payment has not been raised, the reserve has run out.

"Last year, Melvin George, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, asked for additional funds for the Cultural Affairs Committee so it could keep up with rising ticket prices, and I couldn't commit any funds at that time. However, I told him I hoped student fee money would be able to cover part of what he needed," Bader said.

Bader said that he got the funds report Aug. 8 and no money was left for the Cultural Affairs Committee.

Of the $51.50 the student pays to the university for student fees, $1.95 is call unallocated," Bader said. He said the Cultural Affairs Committee was asking that assistance come from the unallocated

Bader said that after looking at the balance sheet, there was no reserve. He said he was disappointed because he would like to see the performing arts ticket prices lowered, but that financially it would be disastrous.

George said he was committed last spring to the performing arts series for the price of the student tickets and said he wanted to keep his word on the student ticket prices. The tickets cost $7.50 for five concerts.

"We could either put off the St. Louis Symphony or raise the prices of tickets, and I don't want to raise the price," George said. Bader suggested that the committee investigate other means in trying to get the funds it needs.

NU study commission appoints 4 coordinators

The NU-based Study Commission On Undergraduate Education and the Education of Teachers appointed four regional coordinators to extend its activities nationally.

Paul A. Olson, UNL English professor, is the commission director. The commission studies teacher training and suggests alternatives for educating future teachers. Total funding for the commission is $1,149,429. The project began in 1971 and is to be funded through 1975 with a $750,000 grant from the U.S. Office of Education.

Regional coordinators have been appointed for the East, Midwest, West and South. In the Midwest, Tom Pace, an attorney and college teacher in the Center for Teaching and Learning at the University of North Dakota, is to coordinate community education.

The Air Force Pilot has it made. Air Force ROTC will help you make it.

Here's how:

If you qualify, the Air Force ROTC will give you free flying lessons. It'll be in a Cessna 150—you're started towards the day when you'll solo in an Air Force jet.

That's only one of the fringe benefits of the Air Force ROTC Program. Consider all this:

Scholarships—6,500 of them that cover full tuition. Plus reimbursement for textbooks. Plus lab and incidental fees.

Plus $100 a month, tax-free, to use as you like.
