Special committee rejects Hiram Scott takeover plans

By Steve Arvanette
A special governor's committee has recommended that NU not take over operation of the former Hiram Scott College in Scottsbluff.

By a 7-3 vote, committee members meeting in Grand Island on Friday adopted a motion which said, "The programs which have been suggested by the University of Nebraska are not of a scope and significance to warrant the acquisition of the Hiram Scott property by the University."

The NU Board of Regents unanimously had backed an administration plan which would have converted the defunct campus into a program for agriculture and rural health.

Voting against the motion were Jack Selzer of Scottsbluff, Robert Koeft of Grand Island, and Frank Lewis of Bellevue. Selzer is chairman of an organization which has offered the site to NU; Koeft is chairman of the regents, and Lewis is a state senator who has supported legislation authorizing acceptance of the property by the University.

A bill was introduced in the 1973 session of the Unicameral by Scottsbluff Sen. Terry Carpenter directing the University to accept the property as a gift.

After passage of LB179, Gov. J.J. Exon vetoed the bill and the Legislature was unable to override the veto. However, on the last day of the session, senators approved a resolution urging acceptance of the property by the regents.

The issue of the University using the Hiram Scott campus has touched off considerable discussion in state higher education circles.

Opposition to University use of Hiram Scott has come from Sidney, Chadron, and North Platte, all communities with junior or state colleges. Local fears have seemed to center around the possibility that such an extension of the University might cut enrollments in smaller schools.

Exon has expressed concern that the operation of Hiram Scott by the University might be a duplication of existing programs.

The regents have authority to accept property without the approval of the governor or Legislature. NU President D.B. Varner has said the University would follow any decision made by state officials concerning possible acquisition.
