Display rivalries revived for homecoming festivities

By Vince Boucher

Homecoming displays, once a victim of the socially-conscious 1960s, are being revived on the UNL campus this autumn, according to Pam Dickey, president of Tassels, UNL women's spirit group.

"Everyone is really excited about going back to displays. The comments I've heard have been really enthusiastic," she said.

Display competition is divided into four categories: residence halls; sororities and Love and Cornhusker Co-ops; fraternities and men's co-ops; and an overall competition. Judging will be at 4 p.m. Friday, before the homecoming pep rally.

Dickey said the Alumni Assn. is providing a $25 award for individual categories and $50 for the overall competition.

"A lot of it is for the alums—it's tradition," she said. "Alums can see where some of their money is going and what their living unit is doing now."

Display competition was revived after interest was expressed to Tassels by officers in Panhellenic and Inter-Fraternity Council, Dickey said. Letters were also sent to residence halls and co-ops, where the response was favorable, she said.

"The Alumni Assn. said that if independents were included, it would provide the money," she added.

Competition rules limit expenditures to $50 for each display. Displays must be completed by Friday, and be "in good taste," according to Dickey.

She said that the displays not only involve competition, but are a visible sign of homecoming. In recent years, homecoming events across the country have declined, she said. Even so, she said, "If you tried to do away with it completely, you'd get a big uproar."
