

Closed meeting statement passed

All meetings convened by UNL nonacademic governing bodies that either make or recommend policies should be open to the public, according to a policy statement passed Thursday by the Council on Student Life (CSL).

The statement, prepared by a three-member CSL ad hoc committee, defines policy on open and closed meetings and is to be included in future editions of the UNL Student Handbook.

Appropriate notice of time, location and subject matter should be given for those meetings open to the public, the statement continues.

In addition, all nonacademic information collected in relation to open nonacademic meetings or administrative functions should be available to the public, the policy states.

Under the policy, a motion must be passed in open and public session by a majority of a body before it can go into executive session.

Adoption of the policy causes CSL to change its own rules of procedure. Until now, council rules have allowed the CSL chairperson to call closed meetings whenever an issue concerned "personal problems of any individual or group whose rights may be threatened by publicity."

Alleged violations of the policy statement first should be brought to the attention of the body in question, the policy states. If the violation is not corrected by that body, it should be referred to the council for "appropriate action."

The ad hoc committee that drew up the open meeting statement was established last February as a result of the public not being allowed to attend or the press report meetings of four UNL student fee task forces, according to CSL Chairman Don Shaneyfelt.

The task forces had been established last school year to study the use and distribution of student fees.

In other business, council members discussed problems of UNL minority students.

"One main problem is the size of the minority community," Shaneyfelt said. Only about 300 of UNL's more than 20,000 undergraduates are minority students, according to James Smith, assistant director of Minority Affairs.

The council could encourage various UNL departments to recruit minority students, Shaneyfelt said.

He plans to send a letter to the Cultural Center offering CSL's assistance on minority students' problems, he said.

A Pioneer Stereo System with "Grow Power"...

OMEGA BSR PIONEER
when you want something better

... and 32% off you're not getting soaked.

What's new in the "Grow Power" is simple. It's the fact that Labove has the capability to grow in the future if needed. It's the fact that it's included as your needs grow. The Omega speakers disperse sound beautifully, with their handrubbed wood cabinets and team fronts, but they have the same production qualities. With the Omega speakers you will have an opportunity to hear the real things that is. The real thing is to move into larger living areas. You won't have to part with your Pioneer 424. You'll be able to move them into a grand room at the room. And the Pioneer 424 will be able to bring those larger speaker cabinets. With the Pioneer 424 you'll be able to add a pair of speakers plus you'll be able to add a Mic for P.A., use, headphones and...

The BSR 310 turntable featured with the system is one of the most reliable in the business... which by the way is another reason to go to components. If something does go, only one component goes to service at a time.

Besides, it's a lot easier to bring in one component for service than to rent a trailer to haul a console in.

See a Newfangled for a demonstration of this system and tell him you want some "KNOW POWER" about "GROW POWER".
