Students to compete in court contest

Two teams will represent the UNL Law College in the Regional Moot Court Competition at Kansas City Thursday through Sunday.

The students making up the two three-man teams are Michael Canar of Omaha, James Gordon of Lincoln, David Jacobson of Omaha, Paul Jensen of Rochester, N.Y., David Jorgensen of Lincoln and Steve Spitz of Syracuse, N.Y.

Wallace Rudolph, UNL professor of law, is the coach of this year's moot court teams.

According to Rudolph, the competition involves making up briefs and arguing on one side of an issue. The issue being debated this year is exclusive residential zoning by villages when it affects racial minorities.

Nebraska teams won national moot court honors in 1963 and won regional competition in 1970 and 1971. Last year the school placed third.

Other law schools competing in the event include Washington University at St. Louis, Iowa University, the University of South Dakota, Creighton University, the University of Missouri-Kansas City, the University of Missouri-Columbia, the University of Kansas, Washburn University and Drake University.
