Bob Devaney...

"That's the part that would probably make me miss football the most—being around it every day and not doing anything. So I just stay away."

With his football responsibilities gone, he says that despite an increased travel schedule, he has time now "to take a little more personal interest in some of the other jobs of the athletic director."

"I had a dinner the other night to promote gymnastics," he notes, "and I travel to quite a few banquets. I feel it's important to attend these things to present a picture of the overall sports program at Nebraska."

He shuffles through some of the papers on his desk top and produces a folder describing his responsibilities as the state cystic fibrosis drive chairman. The week's schedule also included three speaking engagements and a live television show.

"But I still have more time than I used to for visiting individually with coaches of the other sports," he points out, "and time to deal individually with their problems."

Nebraska has placed in the lower half of the conference in recent years in the all-sports race, the mythical contest for superiority of a school's overall athletic program.

But Devaney notes the substantial improvement in the gymnastics and golf programs in the last few years, and expresses his hope that the new fieldhouse being constructed near the state fairgrounds will help improve the quality of the swimming, wrestling and basketball programs.

The fieldhouse, which will be named in his honor, is only one of numerous accomplishments since 1967 during his tenure as athletic director.

He says he thinks the prospects are good for the Huskers to win their next two football games and that they have a chance to win all three. A bowl bid is also a definite possibility, he added.

"I think we're going to have a real good year."
