

Fitness lab to do research on epilepsy

The University Health Center's physical fitness research laboratory is conducting a project investigating the effect of exercise on individuals with epilepsy.

UNL students who have epilepsy or a related convulsive disorder are asked to visit or call the laboratory to discuss how they might take part in the investigation.

The study will begin in January and will end in March. Health Center officials stressed that the inquiry will not obligate individuals in any way, and all medical information will be kept strictly confidential. The physical fitness research laboratory is located in the southeast corner of Memorial Stadium.

Make it a special Christmas. . .
