Creativity, innovation keys to teaching grants, fellowships

By Scott Svoboda

A taped jazz record collection and an advising program in mathematics are just two of the projects receiving 1973-74 grants and fellowships from the UNL Teaching Council.

According to Jackie Voss, council member and assistant professor of human development, the council received about 60 applications for funding. This year's budget is $34,000.

The council awarded 12 small grants and seven summer fellowships for 1973-74.

The 11-member council is composed of UNL students, faculty and administrators. It screens applications of UNL faculty members and awards grants to some of those wanting to try different approaches to teaching.

"The words 'creative' and 'innovative' have never lost meaning," Voss said, "but the most innovative way is usually going the traditional route but doing something extra."

One of six grants was given to James Perry and Sharad Seth of the Computer Science Dept.

They received money for a workshop in computer aided instruction (CAI) in teaching mathematics. They will hold a 2-day seminar March 29-30 on the UNL campus.

Since the CAI field is broad and expanding, much more research will be needed, Perry said.

Martin Peterson, associate professor of anthropology, was a 1973 summer fellowship winner. He introduced beginning anthropology as a result of the fellowship. The course accommodates the wants and needs of the student through the Personalized System of Instruction (PSI) or the Keller Plan," Peterson said. The plan allows students to work through course material at their own rate.

"Without a Teaching Council fellowship," he said, "it would have been impossible to find the time needed to complete the course."
