Union to increase food price

Although one Nebraska Union official contends "We don't want to increase prices," he explained this week that "the way food prices have gone up, putting some of the expense on the students is unavoidable."

Food prices in the Union will increase Tuesday, according to Bob Richeson, food service manager.

"It appears right now that all prices on food items will increase," he said.

Although wholesale prices have risen steadily all year, this price increase will be the Union's first since last August.

The price of beef is responsible for the largest increase in expenses, Richeson said. The cost of ground beef has increased by 20% and beef round (roast) close to 50% in the last year.

Ham prices have increased by about 70%.

Dairy and poultry product prices also are rising.

Cheese has gone up 60%, and milk prices have stabilized after a 9% increase. Egg prices, although stable now, have increased 85%.

Despite an increase in flour prices by more than 100%, the Union's bread costs are holding steady. Richeson explained this was because of an annual bid on bread. He has no idea how much the Union will have to bid for bread next year.

"Everything has gone up. A little item like sweet pickles has gone up 58% alone," he said.

Not all of the increasing expenses can be blamed on food prices. Freight cost and wage increases are other costly increases.

A new surtax causes everything shipped in by truck to be higher, Richeson said.

A 14.5% wage increase for full-time employees last July and a 9.3% increase in wages for part time help in November also have caused annual expenses to rise.
