

Senior checks for juniors as well

Students planning on graduating within three semesters should have their degree requirements checked, according to Shirley Thomsen, in the UNL Office of Registration and Records.

Checking consists of reviewing the records of seniors or juniors to determine what courses they may lack for graduation. Checks are done free at the request of the student. He must go to the Information Window in the Administration Bldg. for the check.

Students who are within three semesters of graduation or have earned all but the last 45 or 50 semester hours of credit are eligible for the check.

Students requesting to have their requirements checked during the second semester of their junior year would have a long wait for the results, as current seniors receive priority, Thomsen said. Otherwise, requirements are checked on a first come, first serve basis.

"Students must file an application for a degree early in the term in which they graduate," she added. Upon applying for a request for a degree, the student will receive his second check.

July 1974 graduates must file between May 13-June 12. August 1974 graduates should file by July 19, 1974.

Blacks hold first honor day

The first annual Black Honor Day was held Tuesday to "honor blacks who have made contributions to the Lincoln community and student life," said Leannette Merrell, coordinator of the event.

About 100 black students and faculty members were honored in fields of academics, sports and individual accomplishments. Black organizations, honorary societies, community organizations, churches and businesses also were recognized.

Among those honored were Johnny Rogers. Rogers was honored for his efforts in securing the building for the Culture Center. UNL Chancellor James Zumbege was made an honorary member of the campus organization Blacks of African Descent.
